

Wig Wush and Pat: The Tale of the Dream Hat

Way past the lake, in a big bush.
Lives a small bug, his name is Wig Wush.
Wig Wush has white hair, Wig Wush wears a hat.
Wig Wush has a friend, a brown bear named Pat.

Now Wig Wush and Pat, they talk quite a lot.
They talk about birds, they talk about pots.
They talk about eggs, they talk about ham.
They talk about cats, they talk about jam.

But poor Pat would yawn, his lids would soon droop.
His big head would fall down in a sleepy swoop.

“Wig Wush,” said Pat, “I do love to chat,
But my eyes have grown weary, I can’t stay like that.
I need some rest, I need to snore,
I can not talk now—not one word more!”

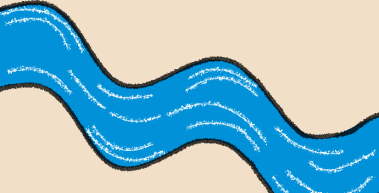

“Fret not” Wig Wush said, you can rest up, no sweat!
Then he pulled a top hat out of a net.
“Pop this on, Pat, and drift off to sleep.
Through this hat here, we’ll be able to speak!”

“Wow” says bear Pat, “Tell me, how does it work?”
“I’ll tell you just that.” Wig Wush says with a smirk.
“Inside of your dreams, my voice you will hear.
But keep your ears sharp, it might not be so clear.”

“If you want to say yes, give your cheek a small twitch.
And if it’s a no, shake your eyebrow a hitch”
Then the hat, very smart, shines a light, red or green
And that is how I will know just what you mean!

So Pat puts on the hat, and he starts to dream.
He stood in a field, next to a large stream.
“Pat, can you hear?”, a voice called from the sky.
Pat flexed his cheek, “Yes, I hear you! Up high!”

“Good,” Wig Wush said, “Let’s keep up our chat.
Let’s talk much more about this and that.”

“Do you like this dream? Is it calm and sweet?”
Pat’s cheek gave a twitch, the field was quite neat.
“Are there any bugs? Do you see my nan?”
Pat’s eyebrow shook twice, “No nan, just some sand.”

"Can you smell the air? Is it fresh and sweet?"
Pat's cheek moved a hair, "Yes, it smells like wheat."
"Do you see a path that winds by the stream?"
Pat's brow gave a shake, "No, not in this dream."

And this talk went on, and on some more.
They talked about swans, they talked about smores.
The hat on Pat's head, red and green it did blink.
Wig Wush laughed and smiled, the pair was in sync!

But as time did pass, the sooner came dawn.
Pat's paws stretched so wide, he woke up with a yawn.
He looked at his friend and said, "This hat is the best!
But now dear Wig Wush, it's time for your rest!"

"I guess you're right Pat. My god, I'm so beat.
I've talked for so long, It's my turn to sleep.
So give me the hat, it's time to switch roles.
Sweet dreams wait for me!" Wig Wush said with a roll.

Wig Wush and Pat, they speak in their sleep,
A bond so strong, a joy to keep!

THE END.
